Before using the Overseas Indexes

- When searching for a birth, marriage or death of a British citizen, first rule out other possibilities in your search strategy: registration in another district, event not yet registered, event incorrectly indexed, etc. Consider also other registration authorities in the British Isles: Ireland (north & south), Scotland, Jersey, Guernsey or the Isle of Man.
- Once the records of British registration authorities have been exhausted, it is then worth examining the possibility of overseas and military registrations. Many records (of births, marriages or deaths of British nationals at sea, in foreign countries, or while serving abroad with the armed forces) are preserved in the country of origin, but may also be recorded among the overseas and military registration records now held by the Office for National Statistics and presented on this series of microfiches.
- It is worth bearing in mind that the High Commission records kept by the ONS only cover Commonwealth countries from after the dates of their independence; there are also some countries for which no provision was made for Consular or High Commission registration – e.g. Australia, Canada, New Zealand & Zimbabwe.
